2020 ANNUAL REVIEW

The year 2020 threw us all a curveball, however, the multifamily, apartment market has remained a bright spot for investors during these uncertain times.

2020 started off strong with the “urban core” and “value-add” product continuing to be the sweetheart for investors with their strong rental upside potential. March arrived and so did the government shutdowns creating a period of “wait and see” for buyers and sellers. By mid-June, the apartment market picked up with veracity due to: record low interest rates available to buyers as well as long-time owners who are uncertain of the future deciding to sell their assets and retire.

In a few short months we have seen renter appetite change with a big shift from the trendy, urban lifestyle to a greater desire for more space in the suburbs as more people are now working from home.

Overall, rents and sale prices have stayed strong in most areas of the Twin Cities with an increase in the suburban market. Due to the amenities of the city being closed (i.e. bars, restaurants, coffee shops, etc.), greater vacancies have been reported in the Minneapolis/St. Paul area and those vacancies have resulted in concessions being offered for most urban properties.

PREDICTIONS FOR 2021

In 2021, we predict that the suburban and tertiary markets of the Twin Cities will continue to see greater demand from local and national investors. We also predict that the urban core will continue to struggle with higher-than-normal vacancy rates. We forecast that market stabilization will come to the downtown areas in 2022 and that the urban core will eventually rebound. We believe that 2021 will see another wave of properties hit the market as sellers decide that it is a good time to sell in order to take advantage of buyers being able to capitalize on the record low interest rates.
